CONSULAR SERVICE.

BRITISH TRADE HANDICAPPED

[BY THE CIVIL SERVICE CORRESPONDENT OF THE " DAILY TELEGRAPH."]

The urgent and important question the improvement of our consular service. is intimately bound up with the success of the proposed British trade bank with any other scheme for enabling MISCELLANEOUS STOOK, British trade to hold its own after the war. The principal complaints against Gent's Shirts, Woollen Singlets, Waist | the Consular service which have been made time and again by the chambers Gowns, Bath Robes, Toilet Scape, Bath of commerce a dindividual firms are that the service is starved, and that it Blankets, Counterpanes, a quantity of recruited from men without any commercial experience.

Mr. Charles E. Musgrave, secretary the London Chamber of Commerce stated, in his evidence before the recent Royal Commission on the Civil Service. that while the salaries and expenses the German Consulate at Petros before the war reached £12,000 a year, the annual total cost for the British Consulate was only £1,840. The German 1206 Consulate was presided over by Consul-General, the British Consulate by a Consul. In addition to this chief official, the German Consulate eighteen salaried officials, the British Consulate two. He further said that while in Petrograd the German Consul had his house or office in a good throughfare and in a prominent position, and there was an air of dignity and respectability about him, so important business, you had to go down an alley to find the British Consul. The contrast in this respect is true, in a general way, of the situation and appearance of, all our Consular offices. In the pust the Foreign Office have taken little or no interest in the proper housing of our Consuls, simply giving the Consul a lump sum for office allowances, and leaving him to shift as best he could not even requiring an account of expendi ture. Another reason is that so much of a Consul's work in the more important ports is taken up with merchant shipping duties, sailors, etc., that he is forced to place the Consular Office near the quays, often in quite a slum quarter. . As matter of fact, with the constant coming and going of sailors, it is found that many landlords will not in such cases let an office in a good neighbourhood as a British Consular building. For this reason, and because so much of a Consul's time taken up with mere routine shipping duties, to the inevitable neglect of our trade interests, the suggestion has been made that the two classes of duties should be separated, forming different departments of the same service.

LACK OF COMMERCIAL TRAINING As showing how little we spend on our Consular service compared with the nug interest involved. Mr. Musgrave pointed out that our total trade with Russia for 1911 was 265,000,000, and the cost of our. whole Consular service in Russis £12,000 year; that is, 0.018 per cent. If this represents the value which our Govern ment attaches to the encouragement of British trade abroad, it will not regarded with wonder that our Consular. service compares so unfavourably with that of other countries and the British merchant is so seriously handicapped in the foreign market. But undoubtedly, as Sir Algernon Firth, President of Association of Chambers of Commerce the United Kingdom, told the Roys Commission, the universal complaint and the chief criticism directed against, the Consular service is that it is recruited from men without any commercial training or experience. The most important recommendation of the Walrond Committee of 1908. which Mr. Bonne Law was a member was a proposal to remedy this defect but, true to its traditional indifference to trade, it has never been carried out by the Foreign Office. Of the eleven successful .. candidates at the examination for the general Consular service, not one had any previous commercial training, and a survey of the nintecedents of the successful candidates ut all the examinations held as far back as 1905 reveals the same latal drawback. In France, Austria-Hungarye Belgimin, and Holland, special training colleges have existed for the Consular service; w ely on a mixed literary, and technics competitive examination; and note quite low standard at that. Arithmetic, instance, goes no higher than vilgar and decimal fractions. The technical subjects can be crammed in a few weeks from any text book This is in age above all of specialisation, and where technical knowledge is required, no worse system of selection could well be devised than that of a Civil Service competitive examination. The one advantage possessed by open competition is that it excludes invouritiem, but we may pay too high s price for it, and, in shutting the door to one eyil, we may open it for others of more serious consequence. The first step towards any practical reform of the Consular service is to hand it over altogether to the Board of Trade. and let the selection of candidates be made by the Advisory Committee of the Commercial Intelligence Branch. the possession of commercial knowledge, instead of being as now the lest being made the first consideration. As Sir Algernan Firth, the is a memberial this Advisory Committee, has pointed jour, when it is lessed to select & firm for long as thouselection is vested not in one man, but in a committee, there is little four of nopotlami

OUT-OF-DATE TRADITION.

The stability of the British Empire depends upon trade, and altogether too little money is spont on the consular service-the London Chamber of Commerce before the war advocated an increase of at least 50 per cent. The rates of salary are considered inadequate. The maximum that a consul-general can rise to is £1,200 a year, and, though the initial salary of £300 may be considered satisfactory, promotion is slow and irregular, and it takes much longer than in the commercial worldy to arrive at a rate or remuneration really commensurate with the importance of a consul's duties. The standard of remuneration in business has risen so considerably in recent times that the present consular salaries would not prove much of an attraction for able young men in commercial houses. . It is believed that the office of British consul dates back to the fifteenth cen tury, and our present service has grown been the control that it was only just before the war that any system of periodical inspection of the Consulates was instituted, so that a Consul may live and lie at his post without any visit from a higher official. The London Chamber of Commerce has constant relations with the Foreign Office, and Mr. Musgrave, its secretary felt constrained to say before the Royal Commission that the tradition still prevails in the Foreign Office that " it is considered to intra dig to appear to be pushing trade. It is under this cramping and out-of-date tradition that our consular service has been created and its instructions framed.

It is clear that if we are to hold our own in the conditions following the war this attitude must be changed radically and a closer and more active co-operation established between manufacturers and exporters and our Government depart ments. It is constant complaint in the commercial world that, while the consuls of Germany, France, and America, for instance, do everything possible to help their nationals, very little assistance derived from the British consul. The competition is an unfair one. The British merchant finds himself competing, no with the German, but with the German backed by all the resources of Government. If our British Embassies and Consulates did their duty, there would be no need for the information Department proposed by Lord Faringdon's Com-

trade bank scheme. CINZE OF BESORS not be possible to introduce any great does, not justify the appointment of a scheme of reform in time to be effective salaried official, but it can hardly might be set on foot now so that a com- to promote British frade, especially the Levant Service, and the Far East that there are many districts where. mercial, but the complaints by British son the salary of the latter would be a traders apply to all three branches, inasmuch as they are not supported as they should be, and as their foreign rivals are,

The point is that the Foreign Office by its tradition and training is not the proper department to which our Consular Services should belong. is surely the natural adjunct of the Commercial Intelligence Branch of the Board of Trade, and the Foreign Office would very likely welcome the change. The London Chamber of Commerce, through their secretary, placed it on record just before the war that British consular service in China does the destiny of the British race. not support the British mercuntile conimunity there to the extent which this latter have the right to expect, and which, indeed, is essential to them if they are affecting the whole Empire. to hold their own in the constantly inreasing competition from French, Germercial houses. It has suf- houses so readily obtain from their fored, more or less continually, from suls, British firms "had actually been neglect, and to this day there is no repres handicapped by the action of their sentative of the consular service in the national representative." China offers a Foreign Office Central Staff. So loose has very wide field for British trade, and the firms concerned in the Far Eastern trade are very important firms in the City of London, and are in full second with the complaints advanced by the Chamber of Commerce.

UNPAID FOREIGNERS AS CONSULS. In is evident that we want not alone a different personnel in the consular service, men with commercial training and experience, but we want the present shackles removed, so that they shall not be tied by the traditions of a service which feels that it is infra dig to bother about trade; and, as already suggested, the first step towards that great reform is the transference of the consular service to the absolute inrisdiction and control of the Board of Trade, to which it naturally belongs. "Does it not strike you as very peculiar," said Lord Macdonnell addressing Sir Algerron Firth. a witness before the Royal Commission, that there is not a single commercial attache in the whole of South America?" "It does," was the reply. This was just before the war, and considering what a fruitful, field, for trade South America affords, and how sedulously it has been cultivated by the Germans, this neglect will seem " peculiar," to other people besides Lord Macdonnell and Sir Algernon Firth. But it is highly significant of the detached official attitude hitherto taken up by this country in matters of trade, on which the nation really lives:

The question of unpaid Consule, the great majority of whom are foreigners, also deserves serious attention. The rule of the Foreign Office has been to appoin these Commute in places where our trade peace comes, but preparations expected that a foreigner will do anything mercial expert should be attached to each where it runs counter to his own interest of the principal consulates. THE EMPIRE'S FUTURE

VARIOUS VIEWS.

The "Daily Mail " published on the 6th ult. a symposium of the views of oversea representatives on the Empire after the war.

Lord Sydenham said he believed an Imperial Cabinet, responsible to a representative Senate, for dedling with foreign affairs, defence, trade, and inter-migration, was opportial in order to secomplish Sir Samuel Hughes (Canada) stated that he favoured the establishment of an Imperial Parliament to deal with matters Sir Thomas Machening (New Zealand) placed, adoquate Imperial defence in the man, American, and other foreign com fore-front, and declared that unless this tives or the great industries, should confer with regard to the matter. New Zealand's resources were practically intouched, and they were capable of eliormous development. Biz John McCall (Tsamonis) Mycoried the holding of a conference of representatives of all parties in the various Empire Parliaments. Sir Peter McBeide (Victoria) em phasised the absolute necessity for keep-

IMPROVEMENT IN PUBLIC HEALTH

It is satisfying to find that matters relating to public health have steadily been put in good order; but there is still for improvement. The same i true of reformatory works and charity relief. Especially is it the case with the work of caving for time-expired convicts and helping them to return to honest living. The work in this direction is still very inadequate, and you are, there-

You do not require to be reminded that a healthly development of local self-government is essential to the strengthening of the national foundation. I order to secure such a development, it is important that each self-governing community should be united by disinterested public spirit for the furtherance of its common interests, free from the evils of factious contentions and self-seeking ambitions. Men charged with the conduct of the affairs of such a community must endeavour to discharge their duties without estentation and with singleminded solicitude for the common wel-munication is necessary, as it has important bearings upon the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country It is, however, also important that means of communication should be employed in an orderly manner with regard to the relative urgency of different routes? Excessive competition between different rival localities must be avoided, as it is apt to lead to results contrary to economic requirements. I wish that you will keep this point in view in considering all questions relating to the development of ments of communication The object of the administrative police is to maintain order and tranquillity and prevent disorders breaking out. It is, therefore, a work of serious responsibility, and it should be carried out in an entirely impartial and correct manner. Should it be conducted in a negligent and improper manner, the result would be very prejudicial to the security of the people and derogatory to the dignity and credit of the State at home and abroad. The powers of the State should be exercised without the slightest partiality and with promptitude and well-considered forethought As for the affairs of judicial police, they must be conducted in strict obedience to the direction and orders of public procurators; and in a spirit of mutual barmony and co-operation. HABITS OF BASE AND LUXURY Such in brief is an outline of the piece. This brief outline of some of the souse of honour.

are arriving at Egypt. " The great majority are Australians, including some nurses.

The P. & O. Company has taken measures for the comfort of the passengers and has arranged for accomodation, clothes, and money. The Company has also arranged to collect the pas sangers at Marseilles as carly as possible.

It is believed that the passengers were not taken out of the water, but that the rescue ships were able to get alongside the sinking ship in ample time, or that the passengers were rescued from the ship's boats.

The P. & O. Co. intends to replace the ship on the run, and so maintain the service without interruption.

The eargo was valuable. It is believed that it included wool, wheat and a little lead from Australia, silk from China, tin and rubber from Singapore, and pearls from Bombay.

Comparatively little loss falls on the London Insurance market, as a large amount of the cargo was insured by the State:

The P. & O. Co. states that 198 of the Arabia's passengers have landed . at Malta and 84 at Port Said. Others A_Vienna telegram states that the are expected at Malta to-day.

Despite bad weather the passengers and crew, numbering 721, were safely transferred to the ship's boats within twenty minutes of the torpedoing of the ship. The discipline was excellent. The Company is giving every assistance to passengers, who willibe brought to London as speedily as possible. Z.

months the year promised to be one of unusual prosperity. In July, however, the province was visited by one of the greatest calamities known to modern imes. Early in the month, the North, East, and West Rivers began to risc simultaneously. Then the enormous flow from the East and West Rivers caused the water to accumulate in the North River, where the banks, unuble longer to bear the strain, burst, /They gave way south of Tsingyun and the water coursed in great volume in a south-easterly direction towards Canton, sweeping out existence every farmstead and village in its track. On reaching the western suburbs of the city it devastated them in a few hours. The entire city was flooded to a depth of from four to twenty feet. The island of Shameen, the foreign residential section, was flooded to a depth of from three to five feet, every house having two or three feet of water in the lower roome. In all towns adjacent to the North, East, and West Rivers the water covered the roofs of the houses, and three quarters of most of the towns were swept away. The loss of life is estimated at not less than thirty thousand. The greatest distress followed the catastrophe. To add to the misery Canton a tremendous fire broke out during the flood, and burned for three days gutting s huge area of the city. As the Head Office as well as Sub-Offices was in danger, all mails and postal property had to be salved. After the greatest Bill dealing with enemy Peers would places of safety. Much credit is due to the staff, who, one and all, worked ten hours a day for seven days in three to four feet of water. The water was actually the overflow of sewage drains, and at every corner its course was stonged by floating corpses and carcases In the House of Commons, in reply to of pigs, rate and other posts. Kwangtung is already well developed postally and there is little scope for extension. Only two Agencies and a few Box-Offices were opened during the year. Considering the floods and the general stagnation in trade which followed, the operations must be considered quit satisfactory. The number of article received for delivery in the district amounts 65-26,400,000, against 28,500,000 the decrease being-confined to ordinary letters. Articles of mail matter posted total 25,900,000. This is only 600,000 less than last year. Registers despatched actually increased from $85,000 to 641,000. Although the despatch of parcels was suspended for nearly six weeks on secount of the floods, the number handled exceeds that of last year. Parcels for delivery in the district amounted to 144,000 against 81,000, while parcels posted rose from 78,000 to 190,000. entirely apart from the definite but charge of the house in Burns Street limited application of its methods to the in which the poet died, counter-attraction to the public-house. Lord D'Abernon, Chairman of the Board, has made an interesting analysis of the effect of the restrictive orders upon drunkenness. The quantity of spirits cleared in the whole of Scotland home consumption is a million gallons, or about 30 per cent. less, in the first half of the present year than in the same period in 1915. Some progress has thus been made, even if it be granted that the whicky clearances the V.C. have been in a considerable degree sanctioned by the authorities in the comparante in the and a industrial in the Zulu War, the Nile Expedition, duty at the local railway station. occupation with Clydeside, it is plain and South Africa, and he commanded that the system is capable of being the Grenadic Chards from 1908 to the present time. Taking a broad King's Bodyguard for Scotland. survey, in Scotland drunkenness has diminished 40 per cent., in the United Kingdom the figure is 50 per cent. In Edinburgh the reduction is above the average, about 60 per cent. The convictions for drunkenness a over Scotland, in Lord D'Abernon's opinion, are rather less than half what they would have been but for the Orders promulgated by the Board. It has been argued that the decrease can be exproportionate arrests owing to diminution of the police force, and the higher prices of beer and spirits. But his Lordship believes that these factors are more than counterbalanced by high wages, unprecedented employment, and the large and steady money carned by men who before the war were only casually employed. A DIFFERENCE OF TEMPERAMENT

One of our "official-non-official" war correspondents has recently presented us with an interesting study of the fighting temperaments of the South of England soldier and his Scottish comrade in arms. It reminds me of a rather interesting experience given by Y.M.C.A. worker. At the hut at whichhe was stationed in France they had one night as guests a London regiment, typical Cockneys. They came up to the hut with a rush, bubbled over with hilarious enjoyment, chattered volubly during the meal, cheered their own and their entertainers witticism with unrestrained enthusiasm, and at the end clattered out of the building like schoolboys. The Y.M.C.A. people their number had thanked the hosts for said,—the Scots enjoyed themselves as heartily, and appreciated everything as sincerely as the Londoners, but they certainly did not "make a song about it." Was it a difference of temperament?

SHE REMEMBERED. I heard a charming little story of the woman war worker to-day. A friend of mine, who happened to be dining at a country-house found himself placed by the side of a pretty girl in a dainty white evening frock Her face was PAID-UP oddly familiar to him, though her name affected by the generous allowances GRAND MASTER MASON FOR SCOTLAND, struck no answering chord in his At a meeting of Grand Committee, memory. "Surely we have met before, matter of water. Economically the Colonel R. G. Gordon Gilmour of he observed. ""Yes we have," she process of amelioration has not gone as Craigmillar, C.V.O., C.B., D.S.O., was merrily replied, at the station an hour far as could be desired if consumers have unanimously mominated for election as lago, where I had the pleasure of collecthad to pay an enhanced price for spirits Grand Master Mason of Scotland for ing two pence excess ticket fare from that are the poor ghosts of their former the ensuing year. He is the eldest son you, and you didn't half like it." And selves before the war. But the moral of the late Mr. Henry Wolridge then my friend remembered that he had BANDORNO. elements preponderate, and so long as Gordon of Hallhead and Esslement, last seen the girl's face under the peak CHERIBON, it can be affirmed on the authority of Aberdeenshire, and assumed the of a ticket-collector's cap at the railway DIEMBER Lord D'Abernoon and his colleagues surname of Gilmour on succeeding to station, and had ruefully admired her Dromparate. that the amount of drunkenness, which | the estate of his great uncle, Mr. Walter | smartness in observing that he had Kora Rabya. has prevailed in Glasgow is double the J. L. Gilmour of the Inch, Liberton, passed his station. She was the niece rate recorded in areas further south and Craigmillar. He saw active service of his host, it turned out, doing war. THE TANKS.

The new war motor has been compared by the war correspondents to an is the great black spot in Scotland at of the Royal Company of Archers, the ichthyosaurus, but in so doing they are sadly out, says the Glasgow "Bulletin." its form, with slongated tail, had no resemblance whatever to the war motor. If an animal comparison is wanted there is nothing on the list of geologic monsters which is half so near the mark as try in taking a half-company through a the still extant rhinoceros, with its letters of credit on its Branches and tion in spite of heavy cosmaltics; and then shout "tiolloping along" and crushing Continent, in Great Britain, America returning with a small party and getting the scrub in its course. "Rhino" would and Australia and transmote banking his would away. Mr. Maxwell not be half-had.
